FOCUS THROUGH REPETITION

The chosen threshold is an arch structure of a building located at 183 Exhibition Street, Melbourne VIC. It appears to be a short distance between the façade and the entrance door. The arch structures change in size, acts as a gradient of movement flow and drag the focal point into the environment or atmosphere beyond the door. The diagram explores the system of 'zooming in'. It is constructed with six panels (6 arches from the structure) that change in width and acts as a transition from an open space into an enclosed area.
