TRANSITIONAL SPACE DESCRIPTION

Our chosen element shows the transition between the two buildings clearly with its facades. They also have a in between space, considered its transitional space. The diagram above shows that through intersecting circles creating the in between space. The red circle represents the public area and the bluw circle represents the private areas. The intersection between the two circles is for the semi private, and in other words, the transitional space that allow people to flow through. The diagram represents the transition of public and private spaces through a threshold.
